We stand in solidarity with voices fighting for justice and reform. We honor and celebrate all peoples, their cultures, and their art.

We commit to unearthing our own privilege and apathy to nurture equity, inclusion, and justice in our community.

These days are quite trying for all and especially for our BIPOC communities. As we witness this historic change in our country, our state, our cities, and in our personal roles in society, we are pushed to the edges while holding questions about this uncertainty and chaos. The Duluth Art Institute recognizes the complex web of inequities, racism, sexism, homophobia, classism, and ableism among them, that drives unequal individual and group outcomes.

We seek to serve as a vehicle for radical social change that addresses the pressing issues of today. We know the arts is the center of our strategy and plays an essential role in building equity in housing, criminal justice, education, jobs, the environment, and more. We seek to utilize the arts to enrich the conversations that affect systemic change.

We value that all peoples, their cultures, and their art contribute to the meaning and understanding of our humanity and should be honored and celebrated.

We treasure artists, their art, and their process in serving a unique role in witnessing, explaining, and providing inspiration to resolve societal inequity and injustice.

The Duluth Art Institute stands in solidarity. We appreciate you standing with us.
